

We Are Watching a Greta Thunberg

HOW many magazine covers was this girl on, exactly? In 2019 you couldn't escape the checkout stand without passing her mug on the rack. I'm counting nine already, though there are others. One for every month is my best guess. Since when did nearly every outlet for the Military-industrial complex find interest in slapping the self-righteous and angry glare of a baby-faced teenager from Sweden onto their cover? Greta Thunberg may be sugar and spice and everything nice, depending upon how you serve your memes, but she is also a Media creation. An intentional and deliberate fabrication. She is a show business actor deriving from actor parents and you would have to be blind to not see what's going on.

Check out this report by The Daily Caller if you don't believe me. They released it in November of 2019. Breaking the story on Greta Thunberg was only a matter of time though. If not them, it would have been somebody else. Look, you can't force feed every American at the Newspaper stand and tell them to say aah, pausing only to wipe their mouth with a bib, without somebody asking the agenda question. FYI, I don't care how you feel about their politics over at The Daily Caller. Prove them wrong.

I dropped you a link but here is the short of it. In the spring of 2019, over 250 Media outlets and journalists partnered with Columbia University to shape control of "climate crisis" coverage in the lead up to the United Nations climate conference. Among those who attended were BuzzFeed

News, HuffPost, The Daily Beast, Newsweek, Rolling Stone, Slate, Vanity Fair, CBS, and Bloomberg. That's what you might call a conspiracy, right there. FYI, Columbia has been a hotbed for CIA recruiting and activity since the very formation of their agency, but let's not get sidetracked by the obvious. The result of their pow-wow is that Greta Thunberg showed up at New York harbor in a 60-foot racing yacht and the rest is history.

The first thing we ought to do I suppose is meet the parents. Svante Thunberg and Malena Ernman. It only takes a few seconds of digging to learn that he's listed on IMDb as an actor. There's your first tip-off. But not only that, Svante's parents are Olof Thunberg and Mona Andersson, also actors with IMDb and IMDb pages of their own. EDIT: How fun, Greta [does too.] What that tells you is that Greta derives from a family of actors and the apple doesn't fall far from the tree though I haven't even touched upon her mother yet.

Malena Ernman is an opera singer and a member of The Royal Swedish Academy of Music. Most notably, she represented Sweden at the 2009 Eurovision Song Contest in Moscow, when little Greta was only six years old. I'm dropping a link to her performance, though for some of you, the photo replete with one-eyed symbolism will suffice. That was the first photo that I pulled up, by the way. It is clearly obvious that the Thunberg's have a hankering for the spotlight. The Media needed a role cast and in the game of identity politics the little Swedish girl was the perfect choice.

Her mother Malena Ernman has a claim to fame of her own: she's a Swedish opera singer. And for Thunberg, having a celebrity for a mom only prepared her for her time in the spotlight.

"That's one of the pros of having a famous mother," Thunberg told The New York Times of her mom in February. "I'm quite familiar with the media and how it works."

I stumbled upon a fact checking website a few moments ago which claimed Greta Thunberg is not an actor, LOL. Apparently, they have never heard of performance activism. Tell me again how Greta's emotionally drenched speech at the United Nations conference doesn't stink of one. How dare you!? In one decisive moment, Columbia University got what they paid for. It's not like Greta was hiding her inspiration. Greta told The New York Times that her celebrity mother "prepared her for her
